

A Good Servant, But a Bad Master

Good morning, respected Principal, teachers, and my dear friends. Today, I am here to speak on a topic that is in everyone's pocket or purse: the "Merits and Demerits of Mobile Phones."

A mobile phone is a wonderful invention. It is like a little magic box!

The Merits (The Good Things)

First, let's talk about the good things.

- Easy to Connect: The biggest merit is communication. We can call our parents, grandparents, or friends anytime, anywhere. If we are in trouble, we can quickly call for help. This keeps us safe.
 - A World of Knowledge: Mobile phones are like a small library. We can use the internet to learn new things for our projects, find the meaning of difficult words, and watch educational videos.
 - Entertainment: After our studies, we can play games, listen to music, or watch cartoons. It's a fun way to relax for a short time.

The Demerits (The Bad Things)

But, like everything, mobile phones have a bad side, too.

- Big Distraction: When we are studying, a "ting" from the phone can easily distract us. Playing games or watching videos for too long is a big waste of our precious time.
 - Health Problems: Staring at the bright screen for a long time can hurt our eyes and give us headaches. It can also make it hard to sleep at night.
 - Less Playtime: If we are always on our phones, we forget to go outside and play. Running and playing with friends is very important for our health, but the mobile phone makes us sit in one place.

My Conclusion

So, my dear friends, a mobile phone is a useful tool, like a good servant. But, if we use it too much and let it control us, it becomes a bad master.

We must be smart. We should use the mobile phone for learning and for safety, but we must also know when to put it down. Let's promise to spend more time reading books, playing outside, and talking to our family face-to-face than we are doing currently.

Thank you!
